I have a fixed element in my application (a toolbar) which has been setup to grow with the screen in portrait mode only, so what it does is it replaces the entire screen with itself. The problem arises when I tap the screen to reach the application's main screen, then I drag the toolbar downwards to create a fold. This is really annoying, so is there a way to disable touch screen pinch, so it doesn't ignore the toolbar in this case? A: I don't think you need to. When you pinch the screen and if you are using android:windowSoftInputMode="adjustPan" it will not respond and will not unhide your content. That way you won't be able to resize your content. But you can use the buttons on your toolbar instead.
